Novorossiya & Fascism and Anti-Fascism

By

Bartłomiej Wieczorek

The war in Donbass has created divisions among the Polish nationalist community into those supporting the side of pro-Russian separatists, those supporting Ukrainian nationalists, and those who are neutral. I find these divisions senseless, as true Polish national revolutionaries should focus on expanding the Polish nationalist movement.

Although I myself have my own opinion on this conflict and support partially one side, I will try to present my position with logical arguments. I am not against Polish nationalists who support the other side of the barricades in this war (on the contrary, I am for cooperation).

Polish pro-Ukrainian nationalists accuse those who support the Russian side of communism and anti-fascism, which is not entirely true. Fact, there will be communist idiots, but on the side of Novorossiya there are also Russian Orthodox and neo-pagan nationalists fighting (Russian National Unity, Rusich Battalion). The nationalists from the organizations I mentioned above are not fighting for Putin, they are fighting there against Zionism and American imperialism, as the forces of Western imperialism are quietly supporting the Ukrainian side. Polish nationalists who support the Azov Battalion will now accuse me of supporting Russian imperialism, Bolshevism and Putin's government, but this is not the case. As a national radical and anti-communist, I don't consider Putin a nationalist because of legal abortion in the Russian Federation, the massive influx of migrants from Central Asia, good relations with Israel, repression of Russian nationalists (including those supporting separatists in Donbass, and many other reasons.) I am not a Russophile or a Russophobe. I think we should support a pragmatic attitude towards that country, but that's a slightly different topic.

On the same basis, one can say that supporting the Ukrainian nationalists of the Azov Battalion shows support for Zionism and American imperialism, because let's not kid ourselves, the West supports Ukraine and the Western imperialists finance the Azov Battalion. I don't deny that there are leftists and communists fighting on the separatist side, which we nationalists don't like, but there are antifa and leftists fighting on the Ukrainian side too. In the Azov battalion and in the whole Ukrainian army there are also UPA and Bandera glorifiers. Another flaw of the Ukrainian nationalists of the Azov battalion is not so much neo-paganism, but anti-Christianity.

Many Novorossiya fighters think that they are fighting against fascism, but in fact the word "anti-fascism" is associated differently by Russians than by representatives of other nations in Europe. In Europe the term "anti-fascism" means support for individual freedom and democracy, combating tradition, condemning nationalism (in Russia European anti-fascists are called liberals). Whereas "anti-fascism" for an average Russian has meant since the Stalinist times fighting the enemies of the Motherland. Russians unfortunately think that everything Western is fascist, which is an insult to the real fascists themselves, who oppose Western demoliberalism, capitalism, consumerism, race-mixing and Zionism.

In the Soviet propaganda everything that was anti-Soviet (Third Reich, NATO, USA and Israel) was called fascism, which is actually ridiculous, because what do these countries and "international organizations" have in common with fascism? Fascism is not Russophobia. Fascism is in fact traditionalism, a strong state, authoritarian rule of an individual, nationalism, heroism, sacrifice for the nation, self-discipline, immortal ideals of Mussolini, which are being spread in Europe today by, among others, Greek Golden Dawn, Italian CasaPound, British National Front and of course National Rebirth of Poland. As a Polish nationalist, I believe that we should fight against criminal and anti-Polish movements, i.e. Zionism, Banderism and Americanism, and support the demand for jobs in Poland for Poles. Mass migration of Ukrainians to Poland is a threat to the mono-ethnicity of Poland and generates unemployment among Poles.

There is no point in shouting about regaining Lviv now, because at the moment it is impossible. Too few Poles live there, first we should focus on internal problems and rearming the Polish army.

We should also support Russian nationalists opposing Putin's anti-nationalist government, American imperialism, Zionism and Banderism. Putin would support Russian insurgents in Donbass if he wanted to, but he prefers to be a shabbos goy and have good relations with Israel than to liberate Russians in Donbass. It was Lenin who granted Donbas to the Ukrainian SSR and set its borders, while Crimea was granted to the Ukrainian SSR under Khrushchev. Under the USSR, Donbas (from 1954 Crimea as well) belonged to the Ukrainian SSR. The communists supported the influx of Ukrainians there to keep them at odds with the Russians under the principle of "divide and rule."

Most of the separatists in Donbass fight for nationalist values, identify themselves with Russian Orthodox Church, there are also communists and anti-fascists, but as I wrote earlier there are also similar individuals on the Ukrainian side. I do not think that Novorossiya is an ideal nationalist state. It's not a model to follow, but in my opinion it's closer to the ideas of the national revolution than the pro-Western Ukraine.